YERBA MATE AND THE GUARANÍ PEOPLE!

The Guaraní were the aborigines that lived in the Paraguayan forest before the Spanish people arrived. They were nomads and they moved around the territory looking for new lands to farm.

One day, when a tribe was about to move to a new location, one of the oldest men decided to stay because he felt tired and weak for the journey. His daughter Yari stayed with him because she didn't want to leave him alone. Soon, they had very little food left. At that moment, the spirit Tupá descended to earth.

He was dressed like a nomadic hunter, and asked Yari for food and shelter for the night. Very generously, Yari offered him hospitality and the last of their food. Her charity surprised the spirit and he offered her a reward. Yari asked for something to make her father stronger and healthier. Tupá grew a green plant with white flowers with his magic powers. He taught Yari and her father to prepare tea using the plant's leaves. When Yari's father drank the tea, he felt much better. Tupá told them to share the plant with the rest of the tribe.

Now, this beverage brings comfort, health and endurance to the Guaraní.

1. Who were the Guaraní?

2. Who was dressed like a nomadic hunter?

3. What did Tupá taught to Yari and her father?

4. What does the beverage bring to the Guaraní people?
